Los Angeles Trade-Technical College took another step toward its big makeover last week with the February 24 official opening of a wing of newly renovated classrooms.

Students; faculty and administrators at Trade-Tech thanked the voters of Los Angeles County for the passage of two bond measures in recent years that have provided funds for renovations at local community colleges.

The improvements in Building F on the campus at Washington Boulevard and Grand Avenue include new floor plans, interior and furnishing, capabilities for high-speed Internet access, and other features.

The renovation is one of several major and minor projects that are part of a $230 million renovation plan that is being paid for with taxpayer funds from Propositions A and AA
